

I keep losing teeth

Quite a pointed post, having just made my semi-annual date for a dental cleaning.

Now, I admit, I'm a floss cheater. Sure, I brush at least twice a day, but I only use the floss in a two month period bracketing my dental appointment (yeah, like using the home gym before bathing suit season).

Still, maybe using the floss as a rope would prevent me from constantly losing teeth. Or tooth, as the case may be here.

I've always been an orderly man. I know where stuff is and know how to treat stuff. My things last a long time. I don't lose keys, coins, watches, glasses or messages. But I lose tooth. Bluetooths, that is.

The first one I lost on a tennis court. The second one I lost in my house. I just purchased my third bluetooth in five years (which is as long as I've owned a bluetooth, actually).

I don't think I've lost as many items in the previous 50!

Of course, I found my bluetooth merely a day after I bought the new one. It was in the dryer. Which suggests it was also in the washer. I charged it up and turned it on. "Talk time: Eleven Hours" said the female recording. Of course.

Funny, just like regular teeth, finding your missing one afterwards doesn't do you a whole lot of good. Who needs extra teeth?
